KING COOK CELEBRATION GREAT SUCCESS

Med. '21 Celebrates Ancient Ceremony With Weird Programme

FINE PROCESSION.

Wm. Tobin Once More Receives His Subjects of Med. Faculty.

The Assembly Hall of the Union last evening was the scene of the ancient celebration, the Crowning of King Cook. Before the actual stage event a parade of about 100 students, bedecked in all manner of weird costumes, marched about the city streets. Some features of the parade were the king and his "real female" wives, the guard of honour and the retainers of the dissecting room. The effect of grotesque costuming was only heightened by the presence of femurs and other skeletal remains.

At 8.45 the Mandolin Club rendered much appreciated selections. Soon after there appeared a courier who announced the approach of his "ignoble" majesty. Then to the strains of impressive music, the regal party appeared. The king and his courtiers were handsomely arrayed, especially the ladies of the court.

The opening chorus was sung with a gusto that showed excellent preparation. The Grand Vizier then proceeded to read a mythically medical address, proclaiming the fact that one, William Tobin, alias King Cook III, was to be crowned Maharajah of Kooch Behar. The court physician was next called upon to conduct a physical examination of the king-elect. The speech and tests of the turned men were greatly appreciated, and proved that the subject would soon be fit for the dissecting room. As this was the desired condition, the coronation was carried out.

All conditions being fulfilled, the High Priest read his "laudatory" address, which contained much foolish wisdom.

Amid the "hails" of his courtiers, the Maharajah seated himself on his lowly throne. The coronation song was very appropriate to the disgraceful event at which it was sung. The court crick then called on various ambassadors to pay their respects to the new sovereign.

The envoy from northern lands gave his address on behalf of the Eskimos. His gift proved of great use to His Majesty. The ambassador from Germany presented the compliments and gifts of the Kaiser. The proceedings were then interrupted by the action of one of the slaves, and it was found necessary to remove him in order to perform a serious operation on him. Upon his return he sang a pleading dirge, accompanied by the chorus. This was so much appreciated that an encore was demanded.

The Ambassador from Dahomey then appeared. This dour envoy drew many a laugh from his audience. The originality shown in tracing the descent of the king was, to say the least, remarkable. The pirate gentleman who next appeared, proved to be the Ambassador from Mexico. He wished, on behalf of his President, that every amiable disease in the world might visit His Majesty, and that he soon cease to disgrace the world with his presence. Would that we could reproduce verbatim the speeches of the various ambassadors, but modesty forbids.

Amid a deep silence, King Tobin arose and read his address to his subjects. He harangued them in the most flowery language of the dissecting room, and proved to all present that he was wise in the foolishness of camouflage. Despite the tongue-twisting words, which the Sophs had provided, the King did himself credit. Laying aside his royal dignity, the King thanked the class of '21 for the honour they had bestowed on him, and sang his famous drinking song, "We All Went Home in a Cab." The applause which ensued forced an encore from Tobin. In reply the "females" of the court sang a fitting little ditty.

During a short interim in the proceedings the orchestra played some haunting oriental music, which provided the efficiency of the musicians.

The programme was continued by a song of the eunuchs. A dance followed, which further showed the great preparation which was made for the affair. Mr. Fink, leader of the chorus, then sang a song of tribute to James McGill. The chorus responded with "Good-Night, Ladies." This was followed by "Come, Fill Your Glasses Up," "Hall Alma Mater," and "God Save the King."

The three hundred students present ought to have enjoyed the show to the utmost. Everything ran smoothly, and only the highest praise can be expressed towards the executive and the class of Med. '21. The efforts of Messrs. Cooder and Fink, who were responsible for the lyrics and general management, certainly deserved all the success which was achieved.

ARTS MEN TO HOLD FUNCTION

Smoker and Supper the Novel Function That Will be Staged March 13th.

Preparations for the Smoker and Supper to be given on March 13th by the Arts Undergraduate Society are rapidly maturing. The contract for the catering has been given to Joyce and Co., of Phillips Square, and the tickets will be on sale at one dollar by Monday next. These Smokers and Suppers are a new thing at McGill, the precedent having been set last year, by the Arts Undergraduate Society. The first part of the programme is very much like that of an ordinary Smoker. The chief difference lies in the nature of the programme. The usual speeches by prominent members of the faculty will be reserved for the later part, which will take place in the dining room of the Union. This room will be suitably decorated for the occasion, and several novel features are being planned for this part of the programme.

Mr. Binmore, President of the Glee Club, is looking after the entertainment for the Smoker, and has promised the Executive a specially fine programme, including several new acts. Before the war the Arts Undergraduate Society staged an Annual Dinner, which was the big event of the year for the Arts men. Since the war broke out it has been thought expedient to curtail all formal dinners, and the Smoker and Supper, which combines the pleasures and informal nature of the Smoker with the more elaborate function. Probably the best recommendation of these affairs is the opinion generally held of them by the men of the senior classes, who witnessed last year's event. Last year over one hundred tickets were sold. The tables were arranged by classes, the graduating class being seated in the most conspicuous position. If each class has a sufficient representative, the same plan will be followed this year. That is, each class will be given its own table.

McGILL MEETS VICKERS' TEAM AGAIN TO-NIGHT

Last Fixture of Season Decides Championship.

LOYOLA vs. NATIONAL.

Red and White Will Have to Work Hard to Secure Cup.

The McGill sextet will meet the Canadian Vickers' squad to-night from 9 to 10, at the Victoria Rink. This should prove one of the best games staged this year, as it will doubtless decide the championship for the City League. The first game will be played between National and Loyola, and should also prove of considerable interest. A few weeks ago National were at the bottom of the League, but since then they have moved up one place, leaving Vickers at the bottom. This is perhaps due to a certain extent to the reorganization of their team, Dandurand having been shifted from the defence to the forward line.

Last year the line-up for the last fixture, and the standing of the League was identical with that of this year, with the exception of the 24th team, in place of Can. Vickers, and any spectators of last year's game will remember how National spruced up, and put it over their opponents at the last moment; and no one can say that they may not do it this year; at least, we hope they will. But if nothing unprecedented happens, the Loyola squad should trim their opponents by a wide margin, and it is up to the Red and White to defeat Vickers, thus at last tying with Loyola, if not pulling out ahead of them, and this can only be done if the team is properly supported by rooters; therefore turn out to-night, fellows, in a crowd, and cheer your team, which is doing its best, to bring the honours home with them, on to victory to-night.

This is the last fixture of the season in the City League, and should be one of the fastest all-round sets of games in the series, each of the three games being very evenly matched. Although National and Can. Vickers may both appear to have weak teams, they have certainly both come up a great deal of late, and each will be right up to the mark to-night to put up a good game, and defeat their opponents, if possible.

MONTREAL, THURSDAY, FEBRUARY 28, 1918.

OUR DUTY AS CANADIANS.

The future of the nation is at stake. Our national interests hang in the balance. The present crisis, in which is jeopardized all that is parcel and part of our civilization, requires the utmost in effort and self-sacrifice, which we as patriotic citizens can unitedly contribute. The issues are enormous, the responsibilities stupendous. Mistakes have been made, and are bound to be made. Criticism is rife, much of it just, but some at least of it criminally unjust. It is a time of harrowing stress, when, under the strain, individual criticisms individual, class finds fault with class, party with party, and creed with creed. Such is the situation which we as Canadians are confronted with at this, perhaps the most critical point of the great struggle.

Since the launching of this tremendous blow for freedom and world-peace, our national unity, in accomplishing the deliverance of the Empire from the threatening menace of Prussianism, has been more or less sacrificed to the fostering of class and racial prejudice. In place of wholeheartedly combining, race and creed, in striving towards a common goal, we have allowed comparatively trivial issues to disrupt our unity.

The relation of the English speaking provinces of the Dominion to the province of Quebec presents an example of the folly of racial and creed animosity with which the nation, even as truly as with her Teutonic enemies, has to cope. If there is one duty which more than any other the University man should regard as especially his, it is that of diligently and relentlessly combating and stamping out the insinuations and ill-advised criticism which, usually bred of ignorance, have but one effect—that of stirring up class animosity.

There is a certain class of persons, who, lacking in moral and mental balance, take a fiendish delight in raking over the smouldering coals of religious and racial differences which have for generations lain buried beneath a generous coverlet of good feeling and patriotism. As a result of the insidious efforts of such mischief makers, in reality no less maniacal and irresponsible than the rampant "fire bug," who scatters a spreading flame of destruction in his path, prejudice, animosity and suspicion disintegrate the existing unification of sympathies and interests.

And such, to give point to our implication, is the situation between the traditionally French Canadian Province of Quebec and her sister province. The average Ontarian, for example, influenced to the point of being "taken in" by the rabid Orangeman and by the numerous tales of racial hostility which certain newspapers of his province delight to weave with fantasy and exaggeration, talks wildly of an impending Civil War. He interprets the so-called apathetic attitude of the French Canadian adopted toward the duty of donning khaki as treachery and smouldering hostility. And as an adequate and absolute justification for each and all of his accusations, and ill-advised insinuations, he waves aloft the recruiting figures and points with a denouncing and self-satisfied air to Quebec's quota.

If the French Canadian representation at the front is not satisfactory—and it is not—what is responsible for the discrepancy? What is the reason, and is there a remedy? Is the one and only panacea to the situation to be gained by a general denunciation of the race or in the spirit of justice are we to seek out the root of the difficulty, and if possible apply a remedy? Is it not possible that the masses of our Quebec population are placed at a particular disadvantage? May not a predominating illiteracy and complete subjection to superstition abetted by an almost total inability to think for themselves or to comprehend the larger interests of national interest, in some measure account for the so-called apathetic attitude of these masses? We speak now of the lower classes, the peasants and poor who constitute so great a proportion of the population of our province; the classes which are subject to but one influence, and whose world is confined to the narrow margins of the domestic circle. Is it not reasonable to suppose that a European war appears to them but a remote and impersonal affair? Perhaps even we, as English speaking citizens, have something to answer for in the matter—possibly the responsibility for these conditions is upon our shoulders. At any rate we are not qualified to, or justified in, merely condemning that which it has possibly been within our power to obviate.

As for the more privileged classes of our French Canadians, their record in the present struggle has been manifestly in accordance with principles of patriotism. Our own Alma Mater is proud to count among the ever-increasing throng of her gallant sons not a few typical of this class, who in a spirit of unselfishness and self-sacrifice, have not hesitated to lay aside all that is dear to them in the cause of the Empire. The name of one notably, Captain Talbot Papineau, honored, respected and admired by all who witnessed his brief and illustrious career as a student and soldier, will live green in the memory of our Alma Mater as an almost sacred emblem of the imperialistic sympathies and attachment of the French Canadian race.

The time, as we said above, is one of stress, when little sympathy is wasted and judgment is summary. The spirit of toleration has become negligible, and a brotherly tendency to deal generously with those whom we believe to err is lacking to a regrettable extent. Canada has a great part to play in the present struggle for freedom

Editor, McGill Daily:

Dear Sir,—A short time ago, while turning over a pile of old college note books, containing notes of lectures taken by me in the Faculty of Arts, between 1899 and 1903, I came upon, much to my surprise and delight, the Minute Book of the McGill Literary Society, containing the records of the meetings held from October 18th, 1895, to March 1st, 1901. The last two pages of the book are taken up with the report of the meeting of March 1st, 1901, at which I was appointed secretary. Evidently my first duty was to purchase a new book, and, in the absence of any safe place to store the archives, to preserve the old book of minutes. The new book you no doubt have in your possession. The precious old one I have great pleasure in at last handing over to your keeping. I would suggest your requesting Mr. Gould, the University Librarian, to place it in the vault in the Library, where he keeps some of the treasures of the University, in order that some future historian of the Literary Society may have access to it.

Since the last entry in this book on March 1st, 1901, seventeen years ago, many of the subjects of debate recorded in the minutes, over which so much effort and eloquence were expended, have become commonplace, others are still open to discussion; and the men who debated have scattered and grown up, reared families, grown famous or near-famous, or passed into more or less oblivion. When the book opens, in October, 1895, Mr. Victor E. Mitchell, K.C., then a student in law, and now a well-known lawyer of Montreal, was president, and Lieut.-Col. Frank S. Patch, M.D., then a student in Arts, of the class of '99, was assistant secretary. The debate of the evening revolved around the resolution: "That Woman Suffrage would improve the tone of politics." The speakers for the affirmative were Armistage Ewing, K.C., William S. Ferguson, now, I think, a professor of Classics in a great American University, and S. G. Archibald, now an eminent lawyer in Paris, France. The minutes open with the statement that: "A regular meeting of the Literary Society was opened on time by the President. In the absence of the Secretary and the minute book, the reading of the minutes had to be deferred until next meeting." It was duly recorded also that Principal Peterson, who had lately come to the University, would be present and speak at the next meeting. The Principal was to read a paper, and it was arranged that "an interesting open debate between representatives from Law and Arts was to be on the programme." At the next meeting Principal Peterson read "a very instructive paper" on Literary Societies. The full dress debate was then entered upon: "Resolved that the study and pursuit of Law has done more for civilization than study and pursuit of Liberal Arts" (sic). What must have been the dismay of the representatives of the law when Professor John Cox, then Professor of Physics, gave his decision in favour of the negative! Speaking for the negative of the resolution too, save the mark, were Andrew R. McMaster, now a leading King's Counsel of Montreal, and John G. Saxe, now a well-known corporation lawyer in New York, both at the time in their third year in Arts. Choruses and songs were a feature of the programmes in these days when the singers could be obtained. Thus there is an entry in the minutes of the preceding meeting that "owing to the unavoidable absence of Mr. McMaster, that very sweet song, 'Son of a Gambler,' was warbled by those present." On one occasion, Mr. S. G. Archibald was called upon for a violin solo, for which he was down on the programme. The minutes record that "Mr. Archibald, who was to have rendered a violin solo, had to be excused. Mr. Archibald asserting that he was not he who played that noble instrument, but his mother." The secretary who made that humorous entry is the present Rev. Canon J. J. Willis, Rector of St. Jude's Church, Montreal. At subsequent meetings choruses were rendered by different classes, much to the delight of the audience. Failure to turn up and perform one's part, as promised, was a heinous offence. At the meeting of November 22nd, 1895, "the essayist and songsters both being absent, some little discussion arose as to whether these gentlemen should be censured or not. Finally it was decided not to censure them." It turned out, however, that a first year representative, who was to have taken part in the debate, was absent, and as "no valid excuse was received, it was moved and seconded and carried that his name be entered in the minutes as a defaulter." There is a note in the margin that "this censure was withdrawn, Mr. having forwarded valid excuse for non-appearance." The withdrawal was made only upon receipt of "a lengthy communication" from the defaulter, and only after the defeat of a resolution that "the letter be merely put on the books as it was beneath the dignity of the society to withdraw a vote of censure." What stern old fellows they were 23 years ago, in the McGill Literary Society. But remember that the meeting was put pretty nearly "on the blink" by the absence of essayist, songsters and debater, and conjure up the feeling of futility and wounded dignity experienced by those zealous guardians of the welfare of the society. Consider also that the delinquent was a Freshman, and the explanation is complete.

The debaters covered a very wide range of subjects, some having to do with burning topics of the day, political and otherwise, others with age-long problems which have not since been nor ever will be solved. Thus on December 6th, 1895, the debate was: "Resolved, that the verdict of the Shortis trial was just"—"probably the best contested of the term." I was a school boy in the 3rd Form of the High School at the time of the Shortis sensation, and well remember the visit paid our writing master, Mr. Walker, by one of the men behind the cashier's wicket, whom Shortis had fired at. His face was pitted with black powder marks, and his head was bandaged up. In our youthful eyes he was a most real melodrama hero. The next subject of debate was, "Resolved that clergymen should take an active part in politics." The negative won; anticipating the verdict of the French Canadians at the polls at the election of the next year, which saw Sir Wilfrid Laurier returned to power on the Manitoba School question. And then a succession of diverse topics: "That the jury system should be abolished"; "that Dickens is a greater novelist than Thackeray"; "that owing to the outrages perpetrated upon the Armenians the European powers are justified in breaking up the Turkish Empire"—(we are at the job now, but debating the subject was easier than carrying the resolution into effect); "that universal woman suffrage would be beneficial to Canada"; "that it is justifiable on moral and political grounds to impose a poll-tax of $500 on Chinese immigrants into the country"; "that the present tendency to congregate in large centres should be discouraged"; "that woman has more influence over man than money" (the affirmative won!); "that party allegiance is preferable to independent action in politics"; "that the execution of Charles I was justifiable"; "that a national income tax is desirable"; "that the prevalence of newspapers and cheap periodicals is inimical to true culture" (still a standard grouch of the highbrows!); "that the railways of Canada should be owned and operated by the Federal Government"; "that the adoption of Free Trade would benefit Canada"—(Mr. Andrew McMaster led for the resolution, which was finally sustained. He is still, at latest reports, a Free Trader!); "that it is injurious to a young man to go to the Klondyke at present"; "that church property should be taxed"; "that the control of a University should be in the hands of its graduates"; "that Canada should be annexed to the United States"; "that a member should vote according to the interests of his constituents"; "that the French Revolution has had a greater effect upon the world than the English Revolution of 1688"; "that a general disarmament at the present time would be beneficial to civilization" (the resolution was carried by the nations); "that in times of depression the municipalities should provide work for the unemployed"; "that Canada should make a permanent contribution to the defence of the Empire"; "that labour is justified in organizing against capital"; "that the form of government determines the character of a nation"; "that the introduction of compulsory education in Quebec is advisable"; "that departmental stores are detrimental to the best interests of Canada." We had a tremendous set-to one night upon the resolution: "that the introduction of popular government into Russia is advisable"—some of the speakers for the resolution exhibited all the dramatic fervour and vociferousness of the modern Bolshevik! On another occasion we had a very heated debate upon whether or not cremation should supplant burial. It is quite evident that nothing was too trivial, nothing too serious, to engage our attention in those days.

A few of the men of my own time stand out in my memory because of one trait or another. There was W. G. McNaughton, now a mining engineer in one of the far western states. "Bill" McNaughton as he was lovingly known to young and old. Big and loosely built, shaggy haired and broad of forehead, "Bill" could look as sanctimonious and benevolent as an old-time parson one moment, and frolic like a kitten the next. He could, when in the chair, call down a noisy society upon its shortcomings, or leave the chair and take a hand on either side of any debate. He was our heavyweight, always able at a moment's notice to say something that helped at least just because he said it. After nearly seventeen years I saw Bill one night last winter in a Boulevard, just getting in from Wyoming, Idaho, Kansas or Colorado. I don't remember which. Suffice it to say, he was the same old Bill, and asked me "how the Literary was getting along." Then there was George Irving—a Methodist; no, perhaps I do him an injustice, a Presbyterian Theological student. When I described Bill McNaughton as able to take part at a pinch, on either side of a debate, I had at the moment in mind that I intended to mention George Irving, and that I had to be sure of some little reserve of extravagance in depicting his powers as well. George was absolutely volatile. He could talk on both sides of any debate at one and the same time. He was the limit. Chuck him in to fill up, for an absentee, on cremation, free trade, departmental stores, imperial Zoloverians, the Armenian atrocities, the Baghdad doctrine, annexation, the Munroe Doctrine, vaccination, civil marriages; or just call upon him "to say a few words," to, as it were, pad out the evening's performance, and George would fill up and pad out until he almost had to be stopped with an axe. When George was really hard put to it, he would say anything and everything that first came to hand, cogent or foreign to the subject, for or against the resolution, serious or comic, and more often comic. And he loved doing it, as much as we loved getting him started. He was a rare good sort, was George, and lived up to many an otherwise rather deadly meeting.

Harry Williams, or "Daisy," as we used to call him, was another distinguished member. Harry died a few years ago at the very threshold of a splendid career at the bar. He was the life and soul of any meeting of the Literary when he took part. Keen, logical, humorous and witty at once, well informed, a born satirist of not too morbid a type, he looked upon the world and all its people, past and present, marvelling a great deal and smiling a little, turning a jest as neatly as a verse, a brilliant essayist, a fluent and convincing speaker. We always had a rare time if we could just get Williams, McNaughton and Irving upon their feet, and not quite agreeing together like brethren.

And Talbot Papineau—dear old Talbot Papineau, since gone to his glorious rest. He came up as a Freshman in the fall of 1900, eager, restless, ambitious, even then feeling his power as a speaker and leader, and anxious to get all he could out of the Literary. The minutes of the meeting of October 19th, 1900, record, and I well remember, how he stood up and modestly asked the President, Bill McNaughton, to explain, for the benefit of the Freshmen present, the aims of the society. That was rather like him, I think—to find out what it was all about, what its aims and possibilities, about, what its aims and possibilities, and, being satisfied, to throw himself into the work for the benefit of everyone concerned. I remember his earlier attempts, a little rhetorical and over-exuberant, but gradually more restrained, more orderly in thought, more pungent and convincing. I like to think of Talbot then, and Talbot inditing his magnificent appeal and reproach to Henri Bourassa, and to visualize the vast distances he had travelled in experience and maturity and visions of the future.

But, there, with Papineau I have brought you down to very modern times and current history, and I must leave you here. Remember the vote of censure on the absent debater of 1895, and resolve to do your duty by the Literary, and to make it a stepping stone to your own future. You can get out of it exactly what you put in.

With all good wishes,

I am,

Yours very truly,

WALTER S. JOHNSON.

PROVINCE OF QUEBEC

DEPARTMENT OF COLONIZATION, MINES AND FISHERIES.
The chief minerals of the Province of Quebec are Asbestos, Chromite, Copper, Iron, Gold, Molybdenite, Phosphate, Mica, Graphite, Ornamental and Building Stone, Clays, Etc.

The Mining Law gives absolute security of Title and is very favourable to the Prospector.

MINERS' CERTIFICATES.

First of all, obtain a miner's certificate, from the Department in Quebec, as from the nearest agent. The price of this certificate is $10.00, and it is valid until the first of January following. This certificate gives the right to prospect on public lands and on private lands, on which the mineral rights belong to the Crown.

The holder of this certificate may stake mining claims to the extent of 200 acres.

WORKING CONDITIONS.

During the first six months following the staking of the claim, work on it must be performed to the extent of at least twenty-five days of eight hours.

SIX MONTHS AFTER STAKING.

At the expiration of six months from the date of the staking, the prospector, to retain his rights, must take out a mining license.

MINING LICENSE.

The mining license may cover 40 to 200 acres in unsurveyed territory. The price of this license is Fifty Cents an acre per year, and a fee of $10.00 on issue. It is valid for one year, and is renewable on the same terms, on producing an affidavit that during the year work has been performed to the extent of at least twenty-five days' labor on each forty acres.

MINING CONCESSION.

Notwithstanding the above, a mining concession may be acquired at any time at the rate of $5.00 an acre for SUPERIOR METALS, and $3.00 an acre for INFERIOR MINERALS.

The attention of prospectors is specially called to the territory in the North-Western part of the Province of Quebec, north of the height of land where important mineralized belts are known to exist.

PROVINCIAL LABORATORY.

Special arrangements have been made with the POLYTECHNIC SCHOOL of LAVAL UNIVERSITY, 228 ST. DENIS STREET, MONTREAL, for the analysis of minerals at very reduced rates for the benefit of miners and prospectors in the Province of Quebec. The well equipped laboratories of this institution and its trained chemists ensure results of undoubted integrity and reliability.

The Bureau of Mines at Quebec will give all the information desired in connection with the mines and mineral resources of the Province, on application addressed to

It Is Folly To Accept "Ready Made" Clothes This Spring

HAVE YOUR SPRING WARDROBE "MADE TO YOUR MEASURE"

LET us be frank about this clothes question. Deep down in your heart you have always preferred Made-to-Measure Clothes. No man can honestly deny that preference. It is as natural to prefer a suit that is made to your order as it is to prefer a meal that is cooked to your taste.

Our problem, therefore, is not to convince you that you WANT made-to-measure clothes. That argument is obvious. Our main job is to make you realize that you can afford made-to-measure clothes, that you can afford them as easily as you can afford a factory made substitute.

We say to you: Go to any one of our conveniently located tailor shops, and judge English & Scotch Woollen Co. quality, style and values for your self. See for yourself the remarkable Made-to-Measure Clothes we are turning out at $15.00. Feel the rich texture of the spring woollens—examine the garments we have on our delivery racks, and the price is uniformly maintained at each of our eighteen great tailor shops.

OUR responsibility to you is the same as to thousands of men who come to us season after season for their clothes with the utmost confidence that they will get garments that are right. We feel a sense of moral responsibility for these men; we feel bound to see that as to quality, style and correctness of fit, their confidence in us is not misplaced, and with each suit or overcoat goes our guarantee of complete satisfaction.

IN MEMORIAM.

The following sketches have come into our hands from a McGill graduate, who for the last two years has been almost continuously somewhere in France. They refer to losses which occurred now several months ago, yet we are sure that McGill men everywhere will like to read what is herein set forth.

Talbot Mercer Papineau.

Yesterday, coming out from Paschendale, I heard that Talbot Papineau had been killed.

It is only a few weeks since I met him, for perhaps the second time out here, on his horse at the head of his company, going up the line. One had heard that he had insisted on resigning an honourable and secure position on the staff in order to go back to his old regiment. It was at the head of his company that he fell in the battle.

To those who knew him—had perhaps known him at McGill and at Brasenose—his death brought a keen familiar sorrow. His was a very likeable nature. Three times a freshman at college, as he once laughingly remarked, he never seemed to lose his fresh enthusiasm.

At Oxford he sometimes shocked his hearers, for they always asked him to breakfast! Whether he was speaking lengthily at the Colonial Club, or at the Union, in favour of some scheme of his own invention, which his friends felt they were straining a point in describing as merely "autonomy within the Empire," or as the young Montreal lawyer, who sometimes broke out on the platform or in the press, he always had the courage of his convictions. This he showed at the very outset of the war, and continued to prove until the day of his death.

To those who love Canada, Talbot Papineau's death brought especial bitterness. Here was a young man, the offspring of the one race and educated in the traditions of the other; a man moreover professedly dedicated to public life, not as a living, but as a calling. Some, not despairing of Quebec, had thought to find him our Louis Botha.

But it was not to be. He heard the call of the ancient motherland blended with that of his country in one appeal. In answering it, in writing the public letter which he sent shortly before his death to his kinsman, Bourassa, who shall say that he did not do nobler work for his compatriots than if he had lived to be Premier of Canada?

At the least he, a nationalist of the nationalists, exposed the hypocrisy of the so-called nationalism of Quebec. He died a nationalist while so many others seem content to live provincialists, and false prophets at that. French Canada, if there is such a thing, if the name can be given to that which is neither of Canada nor of France, has unwillingly another hero to confess.

Perhaps the day will come when Monsieur Henri Bourassa will be chiefly known as a relative of the late Major Talbot Papineau, M.C., grandson of that Louis Joseph Papineau who once rose in arms against the British crown—the hero, who fell in Flanders, a nationalist of Old Quebec.—W. G. P.

Percy Molson.

Not far from Vimy Ridge there is a soldier's graveyard, known to every man in the Canadian Corps. It is the last resting place of many officers and men of a famous fighting division of the French Army, but the original possessors have been joined by a host of new comers. Here they lie side by side, French, "Imperialists," Australians, South Africans, Canadians. Over many of their graves the French have placed wreaths made of glass beads. All have crosses.

This spot is holy ground, and not only because of those who lie within. From the very beginning it has remained unsullied and unprofaned by the mark of the beast. The tide of the German onslaught at its utmost flood stopped dead, literally within a hundred yards. Close by, an old stone mill marks the furthest point ever reached by the Uhlans patois. They rest securely here hard by the road which daily echoes to the feet of their comrades.

It is the home of many brave men, as a glance at the inscriptions on the crosses at the head of the graves will show, but never a braver came than he who was borne here this beautiful July day. With his Patrician, he came in state, the pipes playing a dirge at the head. They went; but he remains among those who have gone further West than Canada.

To those who knew him—and what McGill man of recent years did not know something of him!—the death of Percy Molson came very closely home. We could remember him so well on the football field, on the ice, on the track!

Captain Molson came across with the second Universities Company, and was posted to the Princess Patricia's Canadian Light Infantry. He was severely wounded in the "June Show," or third battle of Ypres, and invalided home. He returned to the front in June, 1917, and was killed by a shell in the streets of Avion shortly afterwards. He had aged greatly in the meantime. The present writer talked to him for ten minutes, in a dugout shortly before his death, and had some difficulty in recognizing him. His old battalion, which had hoped so much from his presence, did not have him for long.

Percy Molson was one of the younger Canadians who early felt the call of duty. He obeyed the call and probably, being himself, felt pleasure in doing so, save possibly at the most acute moment of physical discomfort. This does not, however, detract from the greatness of the sacrifice. To-day he sleeps in France beneath a cross which bears his name (Continued on Page 4.)

JEST TALK

—By Jello

NECESSARY.

Frosh: Why, you're talking nonsense.
 Soph: I know it. It's because I want you to understand.

EVOLUTION OF THE HIP POCKET.

Used to be
 In the virile days
 That we carried
 Our pistols
 In our hip pockets.
 And then that custom
 Went out of vogue
 And we carried our licker
 In our hip pockets.
 I am in favor
 Of abolishing our hip pocket
 Before we begin
 To carry our tatting in them.

SAYINGS OF SOLOMON.

If you make a woman think you think she will, she won't; but if you can make her think that you think she won't, she will.

SIMILAR BELIEFS.

Down in Montana there is a railway station called "Eurelia." Travellers who come in contact with the place find much difficulty in pronouncing its name properly.

When passing through the town it is startling to hear the conductor yell at the "offensive passengers":

"You're a liar! You're a liar!"
 Before one has a chance to rally from this unjust accusation the brakeman is likely to pull open the rear door and yell:

"You really are! You really are!"

UNUSUAL.

Barber: How do you want your hair cut?
 Frosh: Off.

James: The ambulance.

DOWN SOUTH.

Two sisters were present at a banquet. One was a widow, and the other was only married recently, but her husband was an officer in a regiment in the West Indies. A young man was accompanying the young widow, but unfortunately thought he was with the young lady whose husband was in the West Indies.

The young widow remarked that the hall was overheated, and he answered: "Yes; it is very warm, but it is much warmer than this where your husband is."

SHAPELY FIGURES.

Bill: I think a kiss is round.
 Lill: Why, I think it is triangular.
 Bill: Well, you give me one, and we'll call it square.

YOU'RE NEXT!

Some freshmen girls decided to take in a show last night, but as there was no Mike or Pat or Tom or Bill to buy the tickets it fell to the lot of one soft voiced maiden to call a certain number and reserve places for the crowd.

"Could you save five places for me to-night?" she asked sweetly. "I'm Mary Brown."

"Well, I suppose we could," replied a surprised and much astonished man. "This is Jackson's barber shop, you know."

A YEAR AGO TO-DAY.

McGill graduates reported for good war service include: Lieut.-Col. F. C. Finley, Capt. J. R. Goodall, Major L. E. W. Irving, Lieut. J. K. M. Green and Capt. C. C. Hale.

Lecture on "Civilian at the Somme," at R. V. C. by Mr. Rives Hall.

Damage done by the students in olden days described. Barbers' Poles, Plate Glass and Awnings went, but times have changed.

above the chrysanthemum crest of his regiment. On the white paint of the cross someone has roughly pencilled the words: "Soldier and Gentleman." Never was there a truer epitaph! Percy Molson was a living hope that Armageddon will prove to have been won on the playing fields of the Empire. Above his name, on the last cross which he was to win, some one else has drawn the McGill crest in red chalk. It shows up well on the white painted surface. For he was a great captain of McGill teams, and a governor of the University.—W. G. P.

The Royal Military College of Canada.

THERE are few national institutions of more value and interest to the country than the Royal Military College of Canada. Notwithstanding this, its object and the work it is accomplishing are not sufficiently understood by the general public.

The College is a Government Institution designed primarily for the purpose of giving instructions in all branches of military science to Cadets and Officers of the Canadian Militia. In fact, it corresponds to Woolwich and Sandhurst.

The Commandant and military instructors are all officers on the active list of the Imperial army, lent for the purpose, and there is in addition a complete staff of professors for the civil subjects which form such an important part of the College course. Medical attendance is also provided.

Whilst the College is organized on a strictly military basis the cadets receive a practical and scientific training in subjects essential to a sound modern education.

The course includes a thorough grounding in Mathematics, Civil Engineering, French and English.

The strict discipline maintained at the College is one of the most valuable features of the course, and the constant practice of gymnastics, drills and outdoor exercises of all kinds, ensures health and excellent physical condition.

Commissions in all branches of the Imperial service and Canadian Permanent Force are offered annually.

The diploma of graduation is considered by the authorities conducting the examination for Dominion Land Surveyors to be equivalent to a university degree, and by the Regulations of the Law Society of Ontario, it obtains the same exemptions as a B.A. degree.

The length of the course is three years in three terms of 9 1/2 months each.

The total cost of the course, including board, uniform, instructional material, and all extras is about $1000.

The annual competitive examination for admission to the College, takes place in June of each year, at the headquarters of the several military districts.

For full particulars regarding this examination and for any other information, application should be made to the Secretary of the Militia Council, Ottawa, Ont., or to the Commandant, Royal Military College, Kingston, Ont.

YOUR PRESCRIPTION OUR ACCURACY

Quality is one thing, accuracy another. The best of drugs imperfectly put together may prove a harm rather than a help. We guard the accuracy of all prescriptions. Our weighing and measuring utensils are of the highest type of perfection, always accurately adjusted, always carefully manipulated. If you want accuracy, we can put it into your prescription.
